W: Right! That involved cooking a dish for the judges. We prepared our dishes in the kitchen of an actual restaurant. M: Did everything go as planned?

W: Not exactly! I was relieved to find no one was making dishes anything like mine. But as I was about to start cooking, I realized that the pizza stone I wanted to cook my pizza on was in the back of my mom's car, and she'd gone home! Anyway, the oven did the job just as well. However, it was tense watching the judges taste the food.

19. What are residents of Boston like according to the talk?

20. What does Ellen Coyle mainly talk about in the end?

B. The qualities required in the workplace.

C. The impact of residents' personalities on urban industries.

【解析】

In his book Who's Your City? Richard Florida says the decision about where to live may be the most important one you make. Richard thinks that people tend to gather in certain cities according to the work they do and even the type of personalities they have. Some cities, such as Boston, lead the way in technology and innovation. New York and London are financial centers. Cities like Los Angeles make quality films. Others like Guadalajara are known mainly for producing various products. Why are some cities centers of creativity while others are more likely to focus on producing things? Richard uses recent research to suggest that personality may play a role.

Cities like Boston are home to people who are open to experience. They like high levels of activity and new ideas. Most technology companies are in or near these centers of creativity. In cities like Guadalajara, residents are both hard-working and agreeable. They tend to follow rules and work well on teams, qualities that are important in manufacturing.

Chinese Baijiu| Most Popular Liquor in China

When it comes to alcohol, China is most famous for baijiu. There are so many varieties of baijiu in China and all are typically high proof, so expect a heavy burn when drinking it and be sure to drink this one responsibly.

Baijiu translates directly as “white liquor” and is made from sorghum (高粱), white rice, sticky rice, wheat, corn, or a blend of these ingredients.

Here are the top brands of baijiu I suggest trying in China:

BRANDS	FEATURES
Maotai	* China’s premium brand of baijiu * the drink of choice for China’s top government officials and business elites * among the most expensive you can buy * a best choice of gift
Wuliangye	* a blend of the sacred “5 grains” in China * with an abundance of flavor * popular among Chinese * slightly less expensive than the Maotai brand
Luzhoulaojiao	* one of the four oldest distilleries in China * originated way back during the Ming Dynasty * with valuable tradition behind how it is made * with good flavor
Erguótóu	* the Chinese equivalent of a cheap vodka * easily available at any Chinese convenience store for cheap

You can learn more about how Chinese baijiu is made, consumed, and even purchase it on Baijiu America. It’s not a casual drink, though, so in China you should only expect to drink baijiu during formal occasions, weddings, or during Chinese New Year.
