From 1262 to 1944 Iceland was ruled first by Norway and then by Denmark. Centuries of foreign rule, and such things as volcanoes (火山) and the weather made life very difficult at times for the Icelanders. There was lots of hard work and little change. The situation began to improve during the nineteenth century. Then in 1944 Iceland became an independent republic (独立共和国); since that time it has become a very rich country where the people enjoy having cars, modern houses and lots of electrical equipment. If you look at the kinds of products that Iceland sells to other countries today—fish, meat, wool and so on—it's easy to see that both the sea and the land are important to Icelanders. This has been true in fact since the time of the first Icelanders—Vikings from Norway who arrived in AD 874.

Some things in the lives of the Icelanders have hardly changed—the Icelandic language, for example. 700 years ago the stories called Sagas were first written down. These can still be read in the old language without much difficulty by Icelandic speakers today.

Recently, China has announced the list of the first five national parks.

Each of them is divided into two parts—the core (核心) protection area and the general control area. In the core protection area, only research and surveillance (监视) in science are allowed. And the general control area is open to the public, allowing travel activities such as camping and hiking. In the future, national parks are expected to be natural classrooms. People can learn about different kinds of animals and plants through eco-friendly (环保的) travel activities.

The national parks can also be helpful to local people. The building of these national parks provides many jobs for local people. People living in or around the parks can work as park rangers (护林员) and guides. They can also sell some eco-friendly things with local colour. So their yearly incomes (收入) will grow a lot.

Then let's take a look at the five national parks.

	Three-River-Source National Park on the Qinghai-Xizang Plateau (青藏高原) is the largest national park in China. Because it is home to the sources of the Yangtze, Yellow and Lancang rivers, people call it “China’s water tower”.
	Northeast China Tiger and Leopard (豹) National Park is in Heilongjiang and Jilin provinces. It covers an area of about 14, 100 square kilometres. It is our country’s biggest and only place for wild Siberian tigers and Amur leopards to live in.
	Wuyishan National Park in Fujian and Jiangxi provinces is a UNESCO natural and cultural heritage site (遗址). The forest makes up over 96 percent of the park. The park is the paradise of birds, the kingdom (王国) of snakes and the world of insects.

After breakfast, Mary walked in the gardens and on the moor (荒野). She spent most of her time outdoors and began to feel healthier and happier than she had felt for a very long time.

One day, she walked around the wall without a door. Suddenly, she heard a bird singing. She looked up, and the robin (知更鸟) was sitting on a branch (树枝) that hung over the wall. She was pleased to see the bird and talked with it.

“You live in that garden, don’t you?” she said. “But no one can go in because there isn’t a door. I want to know what’s behind this wall.”

The next morning, when Martha brought her breakfast, she asked, “Martha, why isn’t there a door in the wall of one of the gardens?”

“No one is allowed (允许) in there,” Martha answered. “Even Mr. Craven never goes in there.”

“But why not? What’s wrong with the place?”

“I don’t know for certain,” Martha answered, “but the story is that when Mr. Craven married, he and his young wife were very happy. They used to spend a lot of their time together in that garden reading and talking. Then one day, a branch of a tree fell down and hit Mr. Craven’s wife on the head. The next day she died.” “Oh, that is such a sad story,” Mary said.

And then she thought something, but as she was thinking those things, she heard a cry. “What was that?” she asked Martha. Quickly, Martha answered, “Just the wind.” “No, it wasn’t,” Mary said. “It did not sound like the wind. And I heard a door shut somewhere.”

“If it wasn’t the wind,” Martha answered, “then it was Betty in the kitchen. She has a toothache.” Mary looked at Martha and thought, “She is not telling me the truth. She knows something she doesn’t want me to know.”
