One of my earliest memories is playing "shops" with my granddad when I was 5 years old. After ____1____ school at 15, I worked in a fruit shop, but I had no idea of how to run my own shop back then.

Several years later, I got married. My husband Eric and I heard about a shop for sale in the nearby village. We had a look and decided to have a shop of our own. That was January 1973. Shopkeeping was ____2____ to us, so we often didn't know what the ____3____ were asking for. But we soon learned.

We can tell by the weather how ____4____ the shop is going to be. On wet days there are very few people around, and when it's snowy people want bread and milk, as they're worried about being snowed in. When it's hot, everyone buys cold drinks and ice cream.

More people shop online nowadays, but they still come here for things ____5____ from their order. I've kept up with technology and have a card reader, but the shop itself hasn't changed much.

Now, as I'm getting older, it's open from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. on weekdays instead of closing at 8:30 p.m. However, I keep it open until 2 p.m. at weekends.

Eric passed away 16 years ago, but I am ____6____ getting rid of (处理掉) the shop. I love it all—talking to the customers and getting ____7____ they want. There are customers who come in two or three times a day, and we see several generations of families. Customers often tell me their ____8____ and I offer advice if I can.

It was the 50th anniversary of the shop on January 13 this year. I wanted to do something special, so I held a party and had drinks and nibbles with customers. I also wrote a book about my memories in the shop. It's called Just Ask Jenny, as I'm always the first port of call when anyone wants to know ____9____.

This shop has been my life. I never ____10____ I'd still be here after 50 years, but I love it and the people. It's what keeps me going, and I've got no plan of retiring.

Heroes come in all ages. These young people show how small acts of bravery make a big difference.

Tom, age 11, is growing out his hair for the third time to help other kids, though some kids are mean to him.

"When I was five, my friend gave away hair and I thought it would be a good idea. Kids in my school and other places often made fun of me, saying I looked like a girl. Even grown-ups did. But I stuck it out. I knew why I was doing it. My hair would help provide free hairpieces to children in need. It felt good to make others happy. I learned to be strong and to stand up for my beliefs."

While boarding in the ocean on a family vacation, David, 18, noticed a mother and child struggling in deep water. The trained lifeguard jumped into action.

"I saw the mom and child being pulled underwater by the strong tide (潮). I shouted, 'Are you all right?' The woman said no, so I swam over with my board. I was tired, but I had little time to think about it. I gave her my board and swam to the boy, who'd gone under. Waves crashed over us as we headed to shore. I don't see myself as a hero, just lucky to be there. It reminded me how precious and unpredictable life is."

Lily, age nine, helped her family escape from a fire.

"I woke up early and smelled smoke. I wok e up my mom, and she shouted for everyone to get out of the house. Minutes later, the roofs collapsed! An electrical fire had started in the top of the house, and smoke alarms hadn't gone off because the fire was above them."

"I paid attention when the firefighters came to talk with us in Grade 3. That's how I knew what to do. It's OK to be scared, but you have to be stronger and braver than your fears."

For two long years, I lived the life of a slave. I wanted to run away, but it was never possible. My master liked to go fishing in a little boat, and he always took me with him. A man called Moely, and a young boy also went with us.

One day my master said to us, "Some of my friends want to go fishing tomorrow. Get the boat ready." So we put much food and drink on the boat, and the next morning, we waited for my master and his friends. But when my master arrived, he was alone.

"My friends don't want to go fishing today," he said to me, "But you go with Moely and the boy, and catch some fish for our supper tonight."

"Yes, master," I answered quickly, but inside I was excited, my chance came!

We took the boat out to sea. For a time, we fished quietly, and then I moved carefully behind Moely and knocked him into the water. "Swim!" I cried. "Swim to the beach!"

My master liked to shoot seabirds and so there were guns on the boat. Quickly, I took one of these guns. Moely was swimming after the boat and I shouted at him, "Go back to the shore, or I'll shoot you through the head!" So Moely turned and swam back to the shore as quickly as possible.

Then I said to the boy, "Xury, if you help me, I'll be a good friend to you. If you don't help me, I'll push you into the sea, too."

But Xury was happy to help me. "I'll go all over the world with you," he cried.

I wanted to sail to the Canary Islands, but I was afraid to go too far from the shore. And so we sailed on south for some days. We had very little water, and it was a dangerous country here, with many wild animals. Once I used a gun to shoot a wild animal. I didn't know what animal it was, but it made a good meal.

Later we managed to get more food and water, and we sailed on. Eleven days later we came near the Cape Verde Islands. Suddenly Xury saw a ship, we called and shouted and sailed our little boat as fast as possible. But the ship didn't see us. Then I remembered the gun which made lots of smoke. Luckily, the ship saw us and turned.

The Portuguese captain listened to my story. He was going to Brazil and agreed to help me. He bought my boat and for Xury, too. At first, I didn't want to sell Xury as a slave, after all our dangerous adventures together. But Xury was happy to go to the captain and the captain was a good man. "In ten years' time", he said, "Xury can go free."

You can put a postage stamp on it, you can write an address on it, and you can send it through the U. S. mail.

No, it's not an envelope or a package. It's the amazing coconut! The coconut is different from most other fruits because every part of it is useful. People drink the milk and eat the meat, they use coconut oil as a lotion (护肤液), and they use the husks for containers (容器). People in some island nations have even used the coconut in place of money. It is possible that humans have been using coconuts in many of these different ways for thousands of years. Even today, people are still finding new uses for the coconut.

One of the more exciting uses of the coconut is as a source of energy in place of petroleum (石油). Scientists around the world are working on using coconuts for energy because coconuts are cheap, clean, and renewable. Already, coconut-rich countries such as Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, and Vanuatu are using coconut oil for this purpose. Engineers from these countries have made an effective biofuel out of coconut oil and alcohol. The fuel can power cars, trucks, ships, and even electric-power plants. In addition, the South Pacific islands of Tokelau are using coconut oil along with solar energy as their primary energy source. The two together can produce 100 percent of the electricity the islands need.

Students at Baylor University in Texas received a grant to study the coconut husk. The result shows that coconut husks can take in water very well. Mixing coconut husks with dry soil helps the soil to hold onto more of the water. The students are also finding that the fibers can replace plastic in some cases. For example, the students are looking into using coconut husk fibers instead of plastic in parts of car interiors. If this is possible, it will help to make vehicles more environmentally friendly.

The husk of the coconut is a perfect package. It protects the coconut from damage. When the coconut falls on the ground or into water, the husk protects it. Its strong husk is the reason the U. S. Postal Service allows people to send the coconut without any extra packaging anywhere in the country. All that is necessary is to stick some stamps right onto the coconut. Each year, tourists on the Hawaiian island of Molokai post about 3, 000 of these "coconut postcards".

Coconuts grow naturally in over 80 countries of the world. They require only sun and regular rainfall. No extra care is needed. Every year, these 80 countries produce more than 61 million tons of coconuts. It is not surprising, then, that people want to find multiple uses for the coconut. Because they're an easy-to-grow resource, coconuts really are more than just great souvenirs to bring home after a trip to the tropics.

18. In Paragraph 2, what does the underlined part "this purpose" mean?

A. Coconuts are not only cheap and clean, but also renewable.

B. An effective biofuel is made out of coconut oil and alcohol.

C. People in coconut-rich countries use coconut a lot in daily lives.

D. Coconuts' husks produce a source of energy in place of petroleum.

19. What feature of the husk makes it so useful for planting?

A. The husk can take in water well.　　B. The husk can be used instead of plastic.

C. The husk can be quickly mixed with soil.　　D. The husk can help protect the environment.

20. In the last paragraph, the writer proves that coconuts are an easy-to-grow resource by _____.

A. listing the facts　　B. showing the results

C. expressing the opinions　　D. comparing the numbers

21. Which is the most suitable title for this passage?

A. A Perfect Package　　B. A Fruit with Rich Uses

C. A Source of Energy　　D. An Easy-to-grow Resource

D

The earth is now covered by space junk after nearly 70 years of space exploration. An accident in 2023 made the clean-up more difficult to start.

According to the European Space Agency (ESA), scientists plan on testing their "junk truck", ClearSpace-1, in 2025. It's a spacecraft with four arms that can catch debris (碎片) and bring it back to the earth. One of its tasks is to bring back VESPA, a 113-kilogram, two-metre-wide rocket part.

But it was hit by another piece of space junk in August 2023, creating new pieces. The ESA is now changing its clean-up plan. "We must … reduce the creation of new space debris and begin to actively reduce the influence on other objects," said the agency.

Most satellites today are sent into the earth's low orbit (轨道), which reach up to around 2,000 kilometres above the earth. There, spacecraft are most likely to hit each other. There may be as many as 170,000,000 pieces of space junk in orbit, according to the ESA. Big or small, any of the pieces can cause harm to a spacecraft. For example, if an object as large as 10 centimetres hits a satellite, the satellite will break apart.

____▲____ One popular plan is to send a spacecraft carrying harpoons (鱼叉) and magnets (磁铁). The craft would shoot the harpoon to stick into the debris before "throwing" it back to the earth. Magnets could move the debris, changing its direction. The debris would burn after entering the earth's atmosphere (大气层) so there wouldn't be much left when it reaches the earth. Scientists are also considering shooting lasers (激光) from the spacecraft to heat up the debris surface, creating a small push that would change the debris' orbit. This change would allow the debris to be caught by the earth's gravity.

Space junk can be very dangerous, and space agencies around the world are testing and planning the clean-up. But why haven't they done anything yet? One reason is the high cost. But they will still keep on testing the cheap and fine clean-up.

22. What is the main purpose of ClearSpace-1?

A. To test the junk truck in orbit.

B. To bring VESPA back to the earth.

C. To avoid the accidents in space.

D. To clean up the debris from the earth's orbit.

23. Why is the ESA changing its cleaning plan now?

A. Because it was hit by a satellite.

B. Because it discovered more debris in orbit.

C. Because it will create new space junk.

D. Because more satellites are sent into the earth.

24. Which of the following can be put in "____▲____" in Paragraph 5?

A. As for the clean-up, scientists have some other ideas.

B. It is too difficult to clean up all of the space debris.

C. Scientists are trying hard to create more useful spacecraft.

D. Scientists have met many difficulties in cleaning up the debris.

25. What can we infer from the passage?

A. The lasers from the spacecraft are to burn the debris.

B. Space debris is dangerous and harmful to astronauts.

C. Scientists have been doing research to clean up the space debris.

D. The high cost of space cleaning will stop scientists from testing.

These days, DeepSeek has received a lot of attention on the Internet. So what is DeepSeek? It's a Chinese AI company founded by a man called Liang Wenfeng on July 17, 2023. The team of researchers have studied in the top universities in China and have no oversea educational background, and most of whom are under 34 years old. They are also very good at math, physics and coding. The company works on AI, especially big models. Think of it like building a super smart brain that can think and solve problems like humans (this is called AGI).

On January 20,2025, DeepSeek made a new AI called DeepSeek-R1. It can help people find information and summarize it, solve math problems, write code, and answer questions like top models such as OpenAI's ChatGPT-40. This made the whole world completely surprised, because it costs much less to build. It only took the team $5.58 million (1/70 of OpenAI's cost) and 2,048 computer chips, and two months to create it. This shows that good ideas can beat big money. On its first day online, over 19,000 programmers around the world started projects to study it. Even Meta (a famous U. S. tech company) top scientist said, "This kind of free AI could change the world."

As a DeepSeek engineer said, "We want AI to be a friend, not something only rich people can use." With R1, China tells the world that great things come from new ideas and hard work, not just money.

54. Why were people all over the world surprised after DeepSeek-R1's birth?

55. What does China want to tell the world through DeepSeek-R1?

56. Would you like to use DeepSeek-R1? Why?
