Sam, a foreign student at Communication University of China, often shares his experiences of Chinese culture on his vlog.

In one video, for example, Sam shared how he had learned the Chinese word "dongxi". He translated each part separately into "east west". And he introduced one theory about how "dongxi" came to mean "things". He told people that all marketplaces in ancient Chinese cities were set up along a single road that ran from east to west. So when you would say "qu mai dongxi", you'd be saying, "I'm going to buy things."

Some other videos show his reading Chinese poems and performing kung fu in Chinese traditional custom, which are quite welcome among his 40,000 followers.

"Many of my followers are learning Chinese, M Sam said. "But sadly, they know little about Chinese culture and the country."

Like many foreigners, Sam once believed that all Chinese could perform kung fu, flying onto roofs and walking over walls. He thought the country was not that developed. But after he got a scholarship (奖学金) to study in China in 2019, his view changed. "China has entered a new period, but many people's impressions of China are still stuck in the 1970s," Sam said. "That's why I started to shoot vlogs to share Chinese culture in 2019."

Until now, Sam has posted more than 40 Chinese culture vlogs online. But making these vlogs is not easy. Take reading the poem Second Farewell to Cambridge by Xu Zhimo as an example.

"I can understand and read every word in the poem," Sam said. "But to touch readers, I need to use proper feelings while reading. So he needed to look for much background information and make his feelings suit each part of the poem."

Though shooting these vlogs takes lots of time, the young man feels proud that his vlogs have inspired many people. Sam said that he wanted to continue bridging the differences between two cultures. "This goal may not be achieved easily, but I will spare no efforts to do my part."

What object has the magic ability to provide you with a whole new world, where you can read books, send messages or go online chatting, post pictures on social media or watch TV programmes anytime? What can entertain you day and night? Yes, you know the answer—your handphone.

Clearly, the handphone satisfies all our wants and needs, leaving us desiring more. According to a survey report by Connected Life, Singaporean youths spend an average of 3.4 hours a day on their phones. This may not seem like a big number to you, but think: what could you do in three hours? Cycling at the park with your family, reviewing your work, helping a friend with his work. Time wasted is life wasted. Is the sacrifice worth it? No, phone addiction must come to a full stop today. How?

One way to stop addiction is to download some apps to follow the time you spend on your phone daily. You will find many mobile apps that help track the exact length of time you spend on your phone, telling you if you run over time.

Each day you can start afresh with a new goal, with a new sense of what you need to do and what you do not.

Another method is to keep your phone off and place it out of sight. When your phone is off, you would be unable to check it so often. Although there may be a strong desire for your phone, keep in mind the many different tasks you need to do instead and work on them. When you feel like turning it on, smack your hand and tell yourself firmly, "Later!"

In short, the most effective way is to busy yourself with other activities and push the complaints of the loss of valuable time with Mr Smartphone out of your mind. After all, these joys are only short-term, and will be your regret in the long run. Now is the time to lock your handphone and unlock your life. Be alive in this world, full of hopes and dreams, beauty and wonders. Cherish your youth while you can. You do not want to regret.

29. What's the purpose of paragraph 2?

- A. To tell what handphone addiction is.
- B. To tell the time that was wasted by adults.
- C. To tell the reason to cut down handphone time.
- D. To tell how to stop overusing the handphone.

30. What is the best way to stop phone addiction according to the passage?

- A. Check the phone as much as possible.
- B. Use some apps to check the time you work.
- C. Keep yourself busy with many different tasks.
- D. Spend no more than 3. 4 hours on the phone a day.

31. Which of the following saying best describes the second method?

- A. No pains, no gains.
- B. Out of sight, out of mind.
- C. Practice makes perfect.
- D. Rome was not built in one day.

32. What's the best title for the passage?

A. Keep Your Handphone Off

B. Satisfy Your Needs

C. Turn Your Handphone Off

D. Unlock Your Life

Li Qingzhao (1084-1155) is one of the best-known female writers in Chinese history. She showed great love for writing and was known as a talented special woman then. But her life was a bittersweet story.

Born into a famous literary family, Li was someone who always wanted to destroy old customs and traditions from the start. Women in the Song Dynasty stayed indoors. They didn't discuss politics, and only spoke when spoken to. But just at the age of 17, Li Qingzhao made a name for herself.

She was lucky in her marriage. In 1101, she married Zhao Mingcheng, with whom she shared the interest in the art collection. They lived in present-day Shandong. They were not wealthy, but they lived happily together. Li and her husband collected many books. They shared a love of poetry and often wrote poems for each other. They sold clothes and went hungry to slowly build up a big library, and they always spent their nights on literary drinking games like this one: An event would be chosen from a pile of books, and the person would win if he or she first named the book, chapter, page, and line where it was found.

This happy life was ruined by the wars of 1127. The Northern Song capital fell this year during the Jin-Song wars. Fighting took place in Shandong and their house was burned. The couple took many of their possessions and ran away to Nanjing, where they lived for a year. Zhao Mingcheng died in 1129, leaving her childless and alone. Li Qingzhao's life was full of turns, but she left many valuable poems to us.

33. What can we know about Li Qingzhao from the first two paragraphs?
