Barbara Lakin, a former fashion designer living in New York, spends hundreds of hours sewing (缝 纫)unique, well-designed dress for old Barbies she buys or donated dolls. The little girls who are going to get these dolls are migrants(移民). Most of them have traveled with their family for months to get to the US border, usually escaping from poor economies and dangerous situations at home in Central or South America.

"It's hard to imagine what these children have gone through. I think for a child to have a toy, especially in these conditions, is really important. It's something that cap comfort them, something that they can hold close. "While toys will never take away the hurt they experienced or the hardships they still face, Lakin said the dolls do make a difference. It's more than just a Barbie doll; at least for a moment, these young migrants can be simply children again. "I think that is particularly important to them, ”Lakin said.

"I get a lot out of it, too. I personally like to hand them out because I love being able to say, I ade this for you. 'and the smiles and the happiness they give me; it's moments like that that make it all worthwhile. "

Lakin has given away nearly 20 Barbies so far and hopes people will donate more, especially black and brown Barbies that look more like the girls who will get them. “I want to give them dolls that look more like them. ”

Similar to the message seen in the wildly popular “Barbie” movie, Lakin wants to make sure these dolls don't create stereotypes(固化印象)on these girls but instead remind them of their worth and the power of their individuality.

24. What is the feature of the Barbies given by Lakin?

A. They are intended for native girls. B. They are partly donations from others.

C. They are designed by migrants. D. They are less attractive in appearance.

25. What does Lakin think of giving away the Barbies?

A. It unites the migrant girls. B. It is well worth praising.

C. It is win-win behavior. D. It brings her much comfort.

26. Which of the following best describes Lakin?

A. Patient. B. Determined. C. Grateful. D. Caring.

27. What does the text mainly talk about?

A. Donated dolls help better migrants' poor conditions.

B. Barbies play a great role in improving girls' self-worth.

C. Lakin comforts migrant girls by giving special old Barbies.

D. Lakin sews well-designed Barbies to raise money for black girls.

Any dog owner can tell you that there's no love like the one a pup gives you. Dogs love humans—and it turns out, that connection can actually help us train dog robots, too.

In a study published Wednesday in the journal PLOS ONE, researchers surveyed 153 dog owners about the types of behaviors they like to see in their pups. Owners responded with a variety of different types of actions they preferred. The researchers identified seven types of behaviors people love to see in their dogs. These behaviors could be programmed into robotic dogs to help make them friendlier, which would be beneficial in a number of ways.

The robot-pups can help provide the same mental health benefits for people as an actual dog while avoiding issues like being bitten or having to take the dog on annoying walks every now and again. In fact, there's already some research that suggests the robot pets might help enrich the lives of the elderly and dementia(痴呆)patients by giving them companions to socialize with —improving cognition (认知)and even physical health in some cases.

But there's a big issue researchers need to overcome: It might not actually be ethical (道德的) to make robot-pups. After all, is it right to potentially mislead an elderly patient with dementia into thinking that they're interacting with a dog instead of a robot? The study even quotes philosopher Robert rrow who wrote about the issue of robot companions two decades ago. “For an individual to benefit significantly from ownership of a robot pet, they must systematically cheat themselves about the real nature of their relation with the animal, ”rrow wrote in 2002, “and the design and production of these robots is unethical in some way as it encourages this trick. "

But even so, the potential for benefit is still there—enriching people's life. So one day in the near future we might see robot-pups at the dog park or walking on the sidewalk alongside their owners.

28. What did the researchers' study focus on?

A. Training and getting on with dogs. B. Dogs' behaviors preferred by people.

C. Different behaviors among dogs. D. People's attitudes towards dogs.

29, Why are dementia patients mentioned in Paragraph 3?

A. To show the benefits of robot-pups to people.

B, To stress the significance of researching on robot-pups.

C. To indicate the popularity of robot-pups among patients.

D. To explain the impact robot-pups have on solving social issues.

30. What is Robert rrow's biggest concern about a robot pet?

A. Its functions are limited. B. It may go against honesty.

C. It will cost too much money. D. It may have quality problems.

31, What's the author's attitude to the future of robot-pets?

A. Doubtful. B. Encouraged. C. Indifferent. D. Confident.

Culdesac, which describes itself as "the first car-free neighborhood in the Us", admitted its first 36 residents in Tempe, Arizona, US, earlier this year. The $170 million neighborhood, with its white buildings and narrow walkways, is expected to hold around 1, 000 people when the full 760 units are completed by 2025. Similar projects in Charlotte, North Carolina, and Houston, Texas, are also underway.

In a country as car-dependent as the US, Culdesac is no lack of foresight(远见) . Although some densely populated(人口密集的)coastal Us cities like Boston and New York City are walkable and have ample public transportation options like taxis, buses and light rails, the majority if Americans are entirely dependent on cars to get around.

This dependence on cars doesn't come cheap, unfortunately. In a 2023 study, the American Automobile Association said that it costs an average of about 89, 000 yuan per year to own and maintain a car in the US.

So, what is stopping Americans from abandoning cars and accepting relatively cheaper choices like e-bikes? In a word, unsafe roads that prioritize cars over people. According to a 2018 report by WHO, the US traffic accident death rate is about 50 percent more than similar nations in Western Europe. At the same time, walkers and cyclists in the US are often blamed for being hit by drivers rather than the other way around.

Still, there's hope. By choosing a new car-free way of living, US projects like Culdesac can provide another way of living that's both healthier and more affordable and, in turn, influence others to live a better way as well. As Vanessa, a resident of Culdesac, said, “For some, cars equal freedom, but for me, it's limitation, Freedom is being able to just simply walk out and access places. "

32. What can we learn about Culdesac from the text?

A. It is expected to hold only 1, 000 people,

B. It is the world's largest car-free neighborhood,

C, It will be finished by the end of this year.

D. It is thought to be forward-thinking.

33. What does the underlined word "ample" in Paragraph 2 probably mean?

A. Enough. B. Possible. C. Similar. D. Special.

34. Why are Americans unwilling to give up cars, according to the text?

A. Maintaining a car is cheap.　　B. E-bikes are not widely available.

C. Road conditions are unsafe.　　D. Drivers are respected by others.

35. What influence can car-free projects like Culdesac have on American society?

A. Limiting freedom of movement.

B. Making local residents feel safer.

C. Encouraging people to explore their communities.

D. Promoting a cheaper and healthier way of living.

We love all types of hugs, from the one-armed hug to full bear hugs. Open up your heart and your arms on January 21 for National Hugging Day! As you might guess, this day is a yearly event.

36_____ Here are some facts about the big day

National Hugging Day was created in 1986 by Kevin Zaborney. Zabomey chose January 21 because it was the time between the winter holiday season and the new year's birthday, which he noticed was a time people tended to feel in low spirits. He also felt that Americans were too embarrassed to show love in public. 37 _____ However, he never actually thought it would become popular.

38 _____ It means “to comfort” in the Old Norse language, first appearing about 450 years ago. However, the history of hugging itself is a bit more uncertain, What is known is that it is only very recently(within the past 50 years)that we have seen a full acceptance of hugging in public, separating it from other distinguished displays of love such as kissing. The widespread adoption of hugging over the recent years has been debated for some reasons. 39_____

Nowadays, we don't even think about the fact that hugging in public was considered improper.

40_____ We also do that to say goodbye, to congratulate someone, to comfort someone, or to show support. We usually hug before sports teams begin their match, and hug to show a general sign of affection between close relationships.

A. It's not practiced enough these days!

B. We hug to greet friends and family

C. “Hug” is believed to come from "hugga"

D. A hug is one of the most natural gestures,

E. One is that some once thought it wasn't so formal

F. He hoped National Hugging Day would change that.

G. It encourages us to express love in the simplest way.
