M: I'm off to the recycling center in town, near the train station.

W: It's a lot of trouble, isn't it? Sorting out your rubbish and putting it into the different places?

M: Not really. I sort it out as I throw it. I have a green box for plastic, and a black box for paper and a blue one for glass. You know, bottles and things.

W: I don't know why you bother. Nothing will change. People will still throw rubbish and anyway, I don't think that enough people recycle, so it won't make any difference in the end.

M: If everybody thought like you, nothing would change. But people are becoming more aware of the damage we have done to the planet. Most people, who understand that recycling works, want to help. Even my mom has started recycling, which is amazing!

W: I guess I might try it. I'm going to start by buying a reusable bag from the supermarket now, so I don't use plastic ones.

M: That's more like it! Come on, get in!

【答案】17. B 18. A 19. A 20. C

【解析】

【原文】M: Thanks everybody for meeting here today. Well, let's get right to the upcoming beach season. Of course, the beach itself is the biggest draw, but we're also planning to continue our guided tours of the historical areas of the city. So, as you know, the tour is a bus ride and it goes from the north end of the beach, into the city, and then down to the southern end. It makes several stops along the way and a tour guide shares some fun information throughout. As in the past, our thought is that seeing what the town has to draw people back on days when they're not at the beach. A new initiative this year is using the beach to host water sports. We're still working out the details, but I think this could really increase the number of both first-time and returning visitors. Uh, and also, because of the damage from last year's storm, some of the eating places on the boardwalk are out of business. To make up for that loss, we're going to provide food trucks. That gives us the option for variety, and there's no risk of future damage since we can just move the trucks. With that, I'd like to turn it over to Joan, who will walk us through the financial situation of the project, both in terms of cost and potential income.

Love traveling? Enjoy adventure? Here are some incredible destinations for your next expedition. Could you dare to take on any of them?

Antarctica

With a population estimated at somewhere between 1,000 and 4,000 people, the world's fifth largest continent is a land of extremes — the coldest and driest continent on the planet. Travelers can only reach it by ice-strengthened vessels made for sailing through the rough seas. Though known for its breath-taking scenery, visitors who trek through the wilderness must be well-prepared or accompanied by a tour operator who knows the area well.

Mawsynram, India

This Indian town receives an average of 11 metres of rainfall every year. In 1985, the Guinness Book of World Records dubbed it the wettest place on earth after it saw 25 metres of rain in a single year. Plagued by a subtropical climate and monsoons, Mawsynram is both a difficult place to live and an interesting trip for tourists.

Mount Thor, Canada

At 1,675 metres tall, Mount Thor is not the world's highest peak, but it is the steepest. As the most famous summit in Canada, Mount Thor is made of pure granite (岗岩), with a 1250-metre vertical drop and an average angle of about 105 degrees. Despite the fact that the mountain is in a remote area, it's a popular destination for avid mountain climbers.

Angel Falls, Venezuela

Although Angel Falls is located in an isolated jungle region and is not reached all that easily, it remains one of Venezuela's top tourist attractions. The falls, which are approximately 979 metres high, including a 807-metre plunge and a 402-metre sloped cascades and rapids, are the tallest waterfall in the world.

21. How can visitors reach Antarctica according to the text?

- A. By helicopter. B. By snowmobile. C. By ice-resistant ship. D. By high speed railway.

22. What attracts mountain climbers to Mount Thor?

- A. Diverse wildlife. B. Stunning scenery. C. Convenient location. D. Challenging conditions.

23. What do the listed destinations have in common?

- A. They are all suitable for family vacations.
B. They are all located in densely populated areas.
C. They are all the world's most extreme destinations.
D. They are all easily reachable by public transportation.

In my early teens, I was once given a film camera as a gift . On receiving it, I jumped on my bike, headed to Wimbledon Common and took photos, just for me: photos of trees and wildlife. I was out all day. On my way home I spotted a tree lit up by street lighting and tried to capture its beauty. Rushing home, I put the spent film in a special little envelope and sent it off to a photography store, desperate to see how it would come out. I took many photos then and loved the fact that when you processed your film you got back colour photos which froze the precious moments, gently encouraging the hobby and the payments for processing.

As I grew into adulthood, that simple, deep happiness gradually faded away. One weekend when I was busy answering the work calls, my eyes caught a box in the corner of the room. I suddenly felt a sense of sadness. The stress growing over these years had pushed the camera from beside my pillow to the box in the corner. I thought I needed a change.

I took out the camera and dusted it down. It was a great joy that it still worked. I bought new film and took the camera everywhere I went. Now it is always on hand to accompany me on journeys, to allow me time to myself. Even if the day is full and busy, I can seize some moments for myself to take photos, to observe the world around me.

The wall of my room now holds all my camera equipment on display, along with photos I've taken. To me, the room represents how I've found happiness: by reconnecting to the younger part of myself I laid aside, by allowing room in my life for pleasure to exist, and by creating an environment that allows opportunities for delight.

(那时我拍了很多照片，当你冲洗你的胶卷时，你会得到彩色照片，这一事实让我很高兴，它冻结了那些珍贵的时刻，温柔地鼓励了我的爱好和为冲洗而支付的费用。)” 可推断，对于作者小时候拍照这件事，作者觉得这是令人兴奋且值得的。故选 C。

(对我来说，这个房间代表了我是如何找到幸福的：通过重新连接我搁置的年轻的自己，通过在我的生活中为快乐留出空间，通过创造一个允许快乐机会的环境。)” 可知，文章讲述了作者小时候很喜欢拍照，后来作者的压力越来越大，这使得他放弃了拍照，偶然间作者看到了角落里的照相机，作者重新开始拍照，在繁忙的日程中获得了乐趣。所以 D 项 “Regaining Pleasure Through Photography (通过摄影重新获得乐趣)” 作为文章标题最为合适。故选 D。
