3.

March, April and May are months full of festivals and events all over the world. Here are some wonderful festivals around the world that happen in spring.

SongKran--Thailand

Dates: 13th-15th, April

In Thailand, it's time to celebrate the coming monsoon season, which will bring the rain many people have been looking forward to. They celebrate it with a festival called

Songkran, when people head out to the streets with water guns to spray(喷, 洒) everyone who walks past. If you walk on the streets where the festival is celebrated, prepare to getsoaked!

Naghol--Vanuatu

Dates: Every Saturday from April to May

Every year, villagers come together to celebrate the harvest of yams, an important part in the people's diet in Vanuatu. The festival is most famous for its "land diving ceremony". During the ceremony men and boys dive to the ground from high wooden towers with only two thin vines attached(附于)to their ankles(脚踝) . The divers' heads have to lightly touch the ground when they jump---something very dangerous if the vines are not measured (测量) properly.

Cherry Blossom Viewing ---Japan

Dates: The cherry blossom season is different from year to year depending on the weather forecast.

The cherry blossom season has huge importance to the people of Japan, who celebrate the days when the flowers finally blossom. Only a few days later, the petals(花瓣) fall to the ground, like pink snowflakes. This is one of the most beautiful things to see. In Japan, almost everyone has picnics in the parks to view the flowers.

Sinhalese New Year--Sri Lanka

Dates: 13th or 14th, April

Just like in many other countries in South and South East Asia, this is the time when the Sinhalese celebrate the traditional New Year, an ancient celebration which marks the end of the harvest season and is one of two times of the year when the sun is straight above Sri Lanka. There are a lot of delicious foods during the celebration.

11. Growing up, I wanted to be just like my mom. She was kind. People always seemed to feel comfortable in her presence. For years, she was a volunteer in our community. I loved going to the local nursing home with her where she taught a ceramic class. On one summer day, Mama told me to get changed and meet her at the car.

I had planned to spend the day at the lake with friends. Why did she have to ruin everything? I imagined the cool lake water. Irritated, I climbed into the car and slammed the door shut. We sat in silence. I was too upset to make conversation.

“Tasha, would you like to know where we are going?” Mama asked calmly.

“No,” I said.

“We are going to volunteer at a children’s shelter today. I have been there before and I think it would benefit you,” she explained.

When we reached the shelter, Mama rang the doorbell. Moments later, we were greeted by a woman. She led us to the front room where all of the children were playing. I noticed a baby whose body was scarred with iron marks. I was told it was because she wouldn’t stop crying. The majority of the children had noticeable physical scars. Others hid their emotional wounds.

As I took in my surroundings, I felt a gentle tug on my shirt. I looked down to see a little girl looking up at me. “Hi. You want to play dolls with me?” she asked. I looked over at Mama forreinforcement. She smiled and nodded. I turned back and said, “Sure.” Her tiny hand reached up and held mine, as if to comfort me.

My mom taught me a valuable lesson that summer. I returned to the shelter with her several times. During those visits, some of the children shared their troubled pasts with me and I learned to be grateful for what I had. Today as I strive to instill (逐渐灌输) these values in my own child, I reflect back to that experience. It was a time that I will never forget.

【小题 1】 The author admired her mom for _____.

【小題 4】 The underlined word “reinforcement” in the passage is closest in meaning to “_____”.

- A. truth
- B. help
- C. comfort
- D. support

12. My father died in December. He had spent the last several years in hospital, and my mother spent a lot of her time ___ him. That is without doubt, a ___ situation for any family. And the ___ was a team of fairly frustrated family members.

My biggest frustration was trying to ___ why he didn't make choices that would ___ him to be involved more fully in the lives of his grandchildren. Yet he ___ each and every one of them. Every morning he asked my mother which of his grandbabies was going to ___ that day. He had frequent visits from his collection of loving grandkids. Kids would have the place ___ up instantly—toys everywhere, cushions off the couches and the TV channel ___ to their station. Every visit was a kid invasion into his space.

Interestingly, he was not at all bothered by the ___ or chaos at all. He was never ___ with them and he certainly never shouted at any child. Visits ended with ___ and kisses.

I felt that relationship wasn't good enough because he didn't actually do anything ___ my children. My dad didn't read to the children, and certainly ___ played a board game or did a puzzle with them. He didn't take them out for ___ or do any of the other things I saw active grandparents doing with their grandchildren. It made me sad that he was ___ to get on with the kids.

A couple of weeks after his death, my 9-year-old daughter turned up in my bedroom at midnight to share a ___ of him done by herself. Included in the picture were several messages and ___ —one for each day since he had died. The most striking one to me was “I loved EVERYTHING about you, Grandpa”.

Apparently, I was ___. All that time I thought he wasn't doing anything with his grandchildren, but he was very actively doing the thing that was most ___ to them. He loved them. And it was all they needed.

When I decided to get married, my father decided to share some wisdom. “Lori, it is just as easy to love a rich man as it is to love a poor man,” he said. My boyfriend didn’t have much money, but I loved him. “What?” I cried. “How can you say that? I want to marry for love, NOT for money.” “But why not marry someone you love who has money?” he asked. “Rich men are materialistic (物质主义的). I’d rather marry a poor man who loves me,” I said and he gave in.

And as we went on, with my family growing, I learned why my father put such importance on money. We had to cover the rent, car, electricity, food, and medical bills. We were under lot of pressure. The worries over whether we would be asked to move out or if we had the money to wash our clothes at the Laundromat this week made me question if I did the right thing by marrying a “poor” man.

I realized that I had entered the ranks of the poor. Not that I’d ever been rich. Most of my life, I considered us in the lower middle-class rank. We had a house of our own, food on the table, cars, clothes, and money for college. But now, as I listened to an apartment neighbour talk about her monthly “Mother’s Day” gift, I realized she was talking about her welfare check (政府发放的救济金). And another young mother tried to “help” me out by connecting me with a friend who stole baby clothes from a department store. “For a small cut,” she said, “I could return my ‘purchase’(购买的东西) for cash.” It made me sick. How poor was I?

I had a college education but wasn’t using it. I insisted on not missing a minute of our children’s childhood and it came at a price. My husband was working as hard as he could and it wasn’t enough. But somehow we made it.

The kids grew. Today, we look back and see the great values gained by going through those hard years. My children are not materialistic. They never thought they were poor growing up because we always managed to give a little bit of food, money, or clothes to the “poor”. They were satisfied with the simple things in life that come free such as a beach day or a horse back ride from their dad.

We had our worries, but we still treasured our very favorite part of the day when we’d nest (栖息地) under the covers and talked about our future, the kids and how much we loved each other. Sure our financial(财政的) troubles caused a lot of fights, but we didn't leave each other. We began to live a better life. We moved to a better community(社区) with good schools for the kids. And soon, we'll face a new challenge with wealth. But we'll never give up. My father died three years ago. Before he died, he knew I made the right choice. I'm proud of my decision.

【小题 1】 .The writer argued with her father because _____.

- A. she thought her father didn't love her at all
- B. her father thought her boyfriend was too materialistic
- C. her father wanted her to marry a rich man while she didn't
- D. she thought her father loved her boyfriend's money more than him.

【小题 2】 .After getting married, the writer questioned if she had done the right thing to marry her husband because _____.

- A. she was often scolded(责骂)by her father
- B. she found her husband was irresponsible(不负责任的)
- C. he didn't think her husband loved her deeply
- D. they lived a poor life with children to support

- A. often regretted not using her college education
- B. worked very hard in order to make more money
- C. had to steal baby clothes from a department store
- D. looked after her children as a professional (职业的,专业的) housewife

【小题 4】 . Why didn't the writer's children think they were poor growing up?

- A. Because the writer always gave them whatever they wanted
- B. Because the writer and her children often helped other people.
- C. Because the writer didn't let her children play with their rich neighbours
- D. Because the writer let her children have a good life through receiving help from others.

【小题 5】 .What do you think is the theme(主题) of the story?

- A. Women should always make a decision by themselves
- B. Listening to the old is important when people get married
- C. Money doesn't matter as much as love in marriage
- D. Children don't mind whether they have a poor family or not

15.Discover Nature Schools programs
Becoming Bears (Kindergarten-2 grade)

By becoming baby bears, children learn from their “parent” to survive the seasons. Kids will find safety in the spring and learn kinds of food bears eat during the summer, and then create a cave for winter hibernation(冬眠). After learning the skills needed to survive, students will go out of the cave as an independent black bear able to care for themselves. (1.5-2 hours)

Whose Clues? (3-5 grade)

Kids will discover how plants and animals use their special structures to survive.

Through outdoor study of plants and animals, kids will recognize their special structures and learn how they enable species to eat, avoid their enemies and survive.

Using what they have learned, kids will choose one species and tell how they survive in their living places. (3-4 hours)

Winged Wonders (3-5 grade)

Birds add color and sound to our world and play an important ecological (生态的) role.

Students will learn the basics of birds, understand the role birds play in food chains and go bird watching using field guides and telescopes. Students will do hands-on activities. Students will use tools to build bird feeders, allowing them to attract birds at home.(3-4 hours)

Exploring Your Watershed (6-8 grade)

We all depend on clean water. Examining how our actions shape the waterways around us. Go on a hike to see first-hand some of the challenging water quality problems in a city. Students will test the water quality to determine the health of an ecosystem.

- Each program is taught for a class with at least 10 students.
- All programs include plenty of time outdoors. So please prepare proper clothing, sunscreen and insect killers for children.
- To take part in a program , please email dcprograms@mdc.mo.gov.
