We greet people we know and people we don't know.Doctor Aka stopped and gave greetings to the men sitting along the way.Ayah and I came to a little store to buy bread and candies.It wouldn't do to arrive at the joy empty-handed.

It's the end of my 7-month stay in an Uzbek village teaching English and I was walking down the dirt roads with my host parents-Doctor Aka and Nurse Ayah.We drew close to a relative's house, Shakhnoza Sister's,

(吉尔吉斯人),

We then continued our joy.There are endless occasions to throw party in this village.Birthdays, weddings, buying a car, a holiday-all call for throwing a party.The occasion in this evening was the return of a relative and his wife from working in Russia.Ayah and I joined the women in their separate place.All the aunts were present.We enjoyed Russian chocolate, drank green tea, told stories, tasted Osh---a rice dish of Central Asia.

My departure (离开) in a few weeks was now a main topic: we were planning to have a good-bye party, to cry, to keep in touch by Skype, and for me to invite them to my wedding.The last blessing was given

Seven months ago I didn't know these people or their language.I didn't know that I would visit from place to place and find them just that joy.

4. What can we know about Doctor Aka? _____

Chinese people first set foot on the top of the mountain in 1960 and other important moments featuring mountaineers from all over the world.

It also records the start of China's surveying and mapping of Qomolangma, which began during the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911), all the way to the most accurate ever recording of its 8,848.86-meter elevation in 2020.

_____, even though we often climb mountains, it's not often we get to work on a scientific investigation, _____, but thinking about our predecessors (前辈) in the 1960s, '70s and '80s, we were inspired by the spirit that helped them overcome the difficulties that, nowadays, the Qinghai-Tibet Plateau, be a link between science and society, and make a bigger contribution to protecting the third pole and the harmonious coexistence of people and nature, _____, general manager of the book's publisher.

D

When we buy something new, we get rid of what's old. That cycle of consumption (消费) has made electronics waste the world's fastest-growing solid-waste stream, which is expected to grow as the world upgrades (升级) to 5 G.

While promising faster speeds and other benefits, 5 G will result in a sharp increase in e-waste. That's good business for ERI, which charges customers to collect their electronics and to securely wipe their data. But less than a quarter of U.S. electronic waste is recycled, the rest ending up as rubbish, causing environmental risks.

Part of the problem concerns laws. In states without laws banning electronics from the regular trash, electronics often end up in garbage and recycling bins. Even when e-waste rules exist, it's left to consumers to handle their old devices properly. But recycling them can be a pain. Rather than drop a used phone in a bin, lots of people have to take their electronics to a store, which may pay them for it or charge them to get rid of it. Many consumers simply throw their devices into the trash or throw them in a drawer.

One solution is to make electronics last as long as they once did. Yet, technology companies are speeding

Wiens, the founder of iFixit, which publishes do-it yourself repair guides.

Some environmental groups say big companies like Apple and Samsung should pick up the cost of recycling the devices they sell. Lawmakers have passed Extended Producer Responsibility (EPR) laws, which require producers to establish and fund systems to recycle or collect abandoned (抛弃) products. Some companies are increasing their recycling efforts on their own. For example, Apple in 2018 introduced Daisy, a smartphone-recycling robot that can take apart 200 iPhones every hour. But that's a drop in the bucket (桶) compared with the 50 million tons of e-waste generated globally last year.

12. What is the second paragraph mainly about? _____
- A. Increasing e-waste caused by 5 G.
 - B. Expenses paid for network services.
 - C. E-waste recycling capacity in the U.S.
 - D. Promising benefits of new electronics.
13. What does the author want to tell us in paragraph 3 _____
- A. Businesses charge consumers too much.
 - B. It's easy for a store to handle old devices.
 - C. Each state must make laws to ban e-waste.
 - D. Recycling e-waste is a painful task.
14. What can we expect of Daisy introduced by Apple? _____

- A. It will be applied to more recycling centre.
- B. It needs to be upgraded to work more efficiently.
- C. It may reduce a large amount of e-waste.
- D. It could bring great profit to big companies.

15. Which can be a suitable title for the text _____

- A. A Sharp Increase in 5 G Charges.
- B. 5 G, Technology's Bright Future.
- C. Apple, a Globally Well-known Brand.
- D. E-waste, Challenging the World.

Grandpa's Bee A long time before I was born, my grandma and grandpa moved into the house on Beechwood Avenue. They had a young family of 4 little girls. On weekend they dug a garden to grow some of their own food.

Everybody worked to keep the garden growing. All summer long, the family ate food from the garden and enjoyed the beautiful flowers. Grandma put up strawberry jam, tomatoes, beans, peppers, pears and peaches in canning jam. They were good to eat through the long winter.

keep up the garden. So they made it a little smaller. There was still plenty to eat from the garden and lovely flowers to enjoy.

Then one summer when Grandpa was eighty-nine years old, all he could do was watch from his lawn chair as the vegetables grew and the roses bloomed. Summer slowly faded, and Grandpa died before it was time to bring in the harvest.

It was a lonely winter for Grandma. She sat near the window, looking out at the yard and wondering if she could plant the garden in the spring. It would be hard to care for it by herself. When spring came, she planted only a little garden.

One sunny day in the early summer, Grandma heard a commotion (喧闹) in the front yard and looked out the window to see a frightening sight—a large group of bees filled the air between two tall trees. There were thousands of bees in the air, so many that the group reached the tree-tops! The buzzing sound was disturbing (令人烦恼的). Grandma watched as the bees made their way into a hole up in one of the trees. Before long, every one of those bees had disappeared into its new home.
