On Friday, January 14, 2005, my cousin, Kara Rose, came into the world. She looked healthy on the outside, but on the inside, the doctors had failed to discover a serious problem.

She often had trouble breathing and then turned blue. The doctors found that Kara had a hole of her heart. They didn't think she would live long enough to leave the hospital.

When she was four days old, she had her first operation. My family stayed together hoping everything would turn out for the best. I was also anxiously hoping the doctors longer. Kara's strength and determination were strong. Eventually, she could go home. waited patiently for new technology that could give Kara a new heart. When she was eight parents took her to a famous surgeon who performed a series of operations. There was no doubt she would make it through the operation, but she succeeded. Kara grew stronger every day, she was well enough to be around people. She had an amazing character and always wore a smile. One day, she fell asleep against my body, happy and content, I realized how valuable life really is. When I felt her warm breath against my neck, I decided to live every day of my life to the fullest. No one younger than I has gone through more suffering and pain than I ever have. I admire her courage. Kara has taught me that no matter how bad things seem, they can work out in the end. Knowing that my little child has made me a stronger person, I now believe that difficulty can be beaten.
