2. (10分) The phrase "southern potatoes" has become popular, thanks to Harbin, a city in Northeastern China that has taken the Internet by storm.

Over 3 million tourists visited Harbin during the three-day New Year holiday. And many of them came from southern China where snow was nowhere to be found. Harbin locals gave these visitors a cute nickname "Nanfang xiaotudou" or "southern potatoes". It is because southern people are usually shorter and they look like small potatoes when wearing thick jackets and hats. To Harbin people, this name is not to make fun of southerners, but to create a sense of warmth with humor.

Harbin tried everything to meet tourists' needs, especially those from the south. Cooks carefully cut the local frozen pear into small pieces. Some drivers pick up southerners for free. A man-made moon is lifted above for tourists to take photos. Harbin really went all out to make "southern potatoes" happy.

However, even though they did all these to please the southern tourists, this nickname "southern potatoes" sparked a discussion on the Internet. While Harbin locals use the name to show warmth and kindness, some visitors feel that calling them "small potatoes" is making fun of their height.

Even though people from the Northeast are kind and warm, we have to realize that there is regional
